Step IV-Distribution of d^n configuration of the CMH in the splitted set of d-orbitals

To define the distribution of d^n configuration of CMH in the splitted set of d-orbitals,

5.3 A BRIEF OUTLINE OF THERMODYNAMIC AND KINETIC STABILITY OF METAL COMPLEXES

To define the stability of the complex compound formed in the solution, two types of the stability concept can be used which are given below:

5.3.1. Thermodynamic stability concept of the complexes

When the stability of the complexes formed in the solution is defined by the thermodynamic parameters like bond energy, stability constant or formation constant then such type of the stability concept is called as thermodynamic stability concept of the complexes. According to the thermodynamic stability concept, complex compound can be divided into 2 different types which are given below:

1. Stable complexes: Those complexes which exhibit very high formation constant in the solution are known as stable complexes.
